

SINGAPOREAN BEVERAGES

Being a first-world metropolis teeming with energy, boasting a wide array of glitzy, world-renowned clubs, a bustling cocktail bar scene, and so much more, Singapore makes for a mighty fine place to party like there's no tomorrow.

In Singapore, safety and security sit at the helm of the government's list of priorities which has, as of late, led them to introduce a slew of drinking laws. As of 2015, Singapore has banned the sale and consumption of alcohol in public spaces from 10:30pm until 7:00am. The ban came into effect after a riot took place at Race Course Road due to public disorder caused by excessive drinking.

Singapore is a foodie paradise. Food is viewed as essential to national identity and a unifying cultural thread in Singapore, often serving as a common topic of conversation among Singaporeans, and its diverse array of drinks is no exception. Despite the excessive taxes that make alcoholic beverages an expensive indulgence, vacationers and locals rarely pass up the chance to enjoy a drink. For those who prefer to avoid alcohol, there are equally delightful alternatives.

BOBA-CANE

Sugarcane juice can be found pretty much anywhere in the world, but it's the perfect match for Singapore's weather that sets this drink apart. It cools down the body, improves energy levels, and has therapeutic effects on your liver.

No list of popular drinks in Singapore would be complete without mentioning Bubble Tea. We've taken what makes Boba unique, offering a range of toppings that add something extra to the beverage that bursts with every sip.

VALRHONA CHOCOLATE

Before the Europeans arrived in the late 15th and early 16th centuries, the culinary world of Mesoamerica was fuelled by amaranth, chillies, beans, and the ever-present maize. When cacao appeared on the food scene some 3,500 years ago, it was more expensive, and therefore more coveted by members of the Indigenous elite. Their Xocolatl was a frothy beverage, made from a combination of fermented cacao paste and hot water.

Valrhona has selected an outstanding cocoa variety rooted in the ancestral land of an Amerindian population that once inhabited the island. Because of the richness and complexity of its volcanic soils swept by Caribbean winds, its cocoa is among the finest and most complex in the world, having been nourished by the cinnamon, nutmeg, and exotic fruits that abound on the island. The name “Kalingo” is in reference to the “Kalinago”, one of the peoples who originally inhabited the island of Grenada.

Having been a certified B Corporation® since January 2020, Valrhona is proud to have secured this demanding certification for the second time in 2023. Ever true to its commitments to transparency and traceability, all the cocoa beans that are used can be traced back to the producer which provides the assurance of knowing where the cocoa came from, who harvested it, and that it was produced in good conditions.
