CHINESE BEVERAGES

China has a rich and diverse history of beverages that will take you on a journey back in time. It has many interesting, yet delicious, beverages that are enjoyed alone or with a meal. While the nation is known for its world-class variety of teas, many other options are available in the non-alcoholic and grown-up-juices departments.

Ancient traditions like Baijiu have been around for thousands of years. Up to 9,000 years ago! Since it was way before any recorded history, this assumption came from extracted pottery. Researchers discovered early beers in the area of modern China, made by the Neolithic people from rice, honey, and grapes.

Since then, alcohol has become a staple for Chinese families during family celebrations and ceremonies, to honour ancestors and gods, and for medical purposes. So, drink to curiosity and your health by discovering these intriguing Chinese drinks.

WINE

Grape wine has a long history in China. Although long overshadowed by huangjiu and the much stronger distilled spirit baijiu, wine consumption has grown dramatically since the economic reforms of the 1980s. Chinese wines have attracted growing attention, with more visitors touring the Chinese wine regions.
